In the North-German Hanseatic City of Stade, a new office building for the Freese Shipping Group was recently completed.

The ground floor of the cubic volume accommodates apartments, whilst the two floors above are used as offices of the shipping company. The first floor is only structured with furniture, thus creating a bright and open spatial layout. The functions are defined by means of long sideboards made from bright wood. The recessed floor above accommodates the management offices and a conference room.

Dark wooden shades dominate this level. Both rooms left and right of the reception are defined by glass walls with an integrated balustrade-high cabinet system.

The applied blue colour range takes reference from the shipping company's corporate design and emphasise the company's Hanseatic attitude.
